

'PINK KIMONO' GIRL SUMMONED AGAIN IN ELWELL INQUIRY

Swann to Examine "Miss Wilson" Sixth Time, but Won't Reveal Real Name.

"Miss Wilson," the pink kimono girl in the Elwell murder case, will be questioned again to-day or to-morrow, District Attorney Swann said, and will be asked if she ever made any threats against the life of the slain gambler.

The identity of "Miss Wilson" has been concealed by the District Attorney's office, as she has been classed as one of the "lovely ladies who stoop to folly," described by Mr. Swann. Mr. Swann was asked to-day if it were not time that her identity was made known in view of the fact that the names of women remotely connected with the case had been disclosed through his office.

"Not yet," replied the prosecutor. "If, however, it becomes necessary to do so, I will. She was known to the Elwell servants as Miss Wilson. I have questioned the lady five times already."

"Are you going to question her again in the belief that she has held back something?" Mr. Swann was asked.

"No," he answered. "I have questioned Mr. Pendleton six times and Barnes more times still. We have re-questioned the witnesses often to ask them to explain new angles of the case constantly turning up."

"Will you have Miss Wilson questioned in your office?"

"That I cannot say just yet. Either there or somewhere else."

"Was she ever questioned as to whether she quarrelled with Elwell?"

"Yes. She said that she had had several spats with him, but none of them were sufficiently serious to justify our believing that they could have prompted his murder."

"Was Miss Wilson asked whether she ever carried a revolver?"

"She was asked and she said she never possessed a weapon of any kind. She was reluctant to discuss her relations with Elwell."

"Was her brother-in-law ever asked if he was in the habit of carrying or handling a gun?"

"He was," replied the District Attorney, apparently without stopping to think, and he said that he never had."

The District Attorney said that he had no thought of sending anybody to Ireland to interview Annie Kane, Elwell's former housekeeper, who was discharged by Elwell eight months before his murder. Miss Kane attributes her discharge to this same Miss Wilson.

Assistant District Attorney Dooling said that an interview with Annie Kane published in this morning's American was of the utmost importance, revealing things heretofore wholly unknown to the District Attorney, and that it provided points for checking up and questioning men and women friendly with Elwell.

Mr. Dooling failed to say what these points were or wherein lay the importance of the woman's assertions. He added:

"It has always been the belief of the District Attorney that these persons were not telling all they knew."

Mr. Swann also made the memorable statement that the man who killed Elwell wasn't telling all he knew, that he had kept his mouth shut about the crime, which added to the difficulty of the District Attorney's office in discovering him.

Recent developments in the Elwell case have led the police investigators into the race track deals and business transactions of the murdered man.

They have been interviewing men with whom Elwell did business in stock buying and with whom he associated in the hours between the closing and opening of the Stock Exchange.

Patently plodding along on this trail they have followed every clue they have come across, and though it has been three weeks since the murder they are far from confessing themselves beaten in their task of bringing the slayer of the gambler to justice.

The pursuit of the "bootlegging" clue in connection with the murder of Elwell was being pushed more vigorously than ever to-day by the Federal agents. Supervising Prohibition Enforcement Agent James E. Shevlin said that he expected developments before night on this phase of the case.

"I have sent for two witnesses," said

Mr. Shevlin, "on new information received by me last night. I am not prepared to say to what developments the information may lead, but stories in the morning papers that the case had collapsed were far from the truth. Our men have been following up every clue and are investigating the case from every angle."

OFF ISLAND DAY, GOES BACK.

"Hard Luck Brick," Pickpocket, Takes Fifteenth Sentence.

Thomas Tobin came off the Island yesterday after a sixty-day residence there for picking pockets. To-day he went back again for 180 days for an attempt at the same offense. He was caught jostling people in a 4th Street cross-town car. His police record showed he had been convicted fourteen times for crimes ranging from grand larceny to pocket-picking.

He said to Magistrate Ten Eyck in West Side Court to-day that his first conviction, in Erie, Pa., for larceny, in 1894, was unfair and since that time he'd been unable to go straight. When he started out, he added, they called him "The Wonder Kid," but later it was "Hard Luck Brick," and the latter name suited him best just now.

SHOT HALTS YOUTH IN SILK THIEF CHASE

Three Escape When Interrupted as They Are About to Carry Away $2,800 Goods.

The janitor at No. 1378 Fifth Avenue heard some one in the silk establishment of Stone Brothers at 3.30 A. M. to-day and called in Policeman Allen Dooly of the East 104th Street Station.

The policeman says he caught four men in the hallway with fifteen bolts of silk and four of cloth worth $2,800. Three of the men escaped and the fourth tried to bluff him with a nickel-plated combination "jimmy" and hammer. The policeman fired a shot that struck the alleged burglar in the back.

At the Mount Sinai Hospital, where it was said he would recover, the wounded man described himself as Walter McGarry, twenty, of No. 274 East 78th Street.
